PREFATORY NOTE.

The following pages contain a "shelf catalogue" of the Chinese and Manchu books presented to the University Library at Cambridge by the late Sir Thomas Francis Wade, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., formerly Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, Professor of Chinese in the University from 1888 to his death in 1895, and Fellow of King's College.

The following letter addressed to the Vice Chancellor by Sir Thomas Wade contains his own description of the collection.

CAMBRIDGE, 11 October, 1886.

SIR,

The less formal communications which have earlier passed between us on the subject, will have prepared you for the receipt of a request, in official shape, that I may be allowed to present to the University a collection of Chinese literature brought together during a residence in China extending over many years. Pending its acceptance, I have been enabled by your kind permission to house it in the University Library, and I had hoped by this time so to have redistributed it as to render its inspection possible. Although I have been most liberally dealt with as to space, however, the arrangement of the books, necessarily requiring an acquaintance with the Chinese written character, and hence devolving on me single-handed, has taken longer than I had anticipated.

The collection will in certain departments require to be gradually subsidised. It contains very little, for instance, relating directly to Buddhism; much less to Taoism, or Islamism. There is, on the other part, as will happen in collections unsystematically made, a certain amount of redundancy. Still, when all that is superfluous or imperfect has been deducted, there will be found in the departments of Confucian philosophy, both of the earlier and later schools; of Archæology; History and reliquiæ of public men; Geography, topographical and political; Law and Administration; Poetry and Belles Lettres; enough to satisfy the needs of an advanced student of the language.

The Legal and Official division, as might be expected in the library of a man whose functions have been so largely those of an official interpreter as mine, is as full as any interpreter could desire.

There are besides the above a considerable number of works to a certain extent encyclopædic, which, for want of a more descriptive term, we are wont to speak of as Miscellanies. These are often, in effect, sectional libraries, not of original matter, but useful as redeeming useful texts from oblivion.

There is likewise a fair proportion of Manchu translations of good Chinese works, and a few Mongolian works. Of the last, very few. I doubt indeed that there are more of these than a dictionary or two in Manchu and Mongolian, or in those two languages and Chinese. Of Chinese Dictionaries arranged according to the rhyme, for the use of poets and composers, which are, in effect, repertories of quotations from the best authors; or in categories of subjects; or under the keys or roots of the several characters; or under other systems which I need not here pause to explain, there is a respectable provision.

Lastly, I have added some works by foreign hands in English, French, or other languages, of which the University Library may not impossibly contain duplicates; books of travel or history; grammars and dictionaries of Manchu, Mongolian, or Tibetan; such works in short as I have found it expedient, without pretension to acquaintance with all the languages in which they may be written, to have within reach for occasional reference.

The circumstances which have induced me to offer this collection, more particularly at this juncture, to the University of Cambridge, I will detail in a separate letter. It will for the moment suffice to say that, while presenting it as a free gift, I press for but one condition, namely that, for the rest of my life, I be allowed free access to it, and that, so long as my powers of mind and body permit, I be constituted its special curator or guardian.

The difficulty considered of finding a man who has not only the inclination but the leisure, to occupy himself with such a charge, this will not I feel sure be regarded an unreasonable prayer, and, assuming it granted, I shall then urge the prescription of very strict regulations in regard to the use of the collection which will have become the property of the University. The destruction of books in China during the twenty years of disorder consequent upon the late rebellion was terrible. Large libraries have since been destroyed by fire, in the capital and elsewhere. That which I am now tendering to the University includes little if anything that it will be absolutely impossible to recover, and both natives and foreigners are at this moment reprinting industriously. Still, replacement of works or volumes, shonld any be lost or abstracted, would be slow and troublesome, and the cost of some of the works in the collection, for which, after years of waiting, I have been tempted to give almost fancy prices, was when I left China in 1882, still daily rising.

These considerations will, I trust, excuse my anxiety, should I appear excessive, to see the integrity of the collection sufficiently guaranteed. I feel that the matter may safely be left in the hands of the University authorities responsible.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

THOMAS FRANCIS WADE.

This collection was formed during a residence of forty years in the East by judicious selection of the best editions of the best works in the most important branches of Chinese literature; and the result is a comprehensive library admirably suited to the needs of any ordinary student. For even although Buddhism, Taoism, some of the fine arts such as music and painting, and several of the sciences such as botany and medicine, can scarcely be said to be adequately represented, still, much may be found on those and kindred subjects in the various great encyclopædias with which the library is so well supplied.

A rough classification, adopted by the donor to suit the room at his disposal, has been allowed to stand, and the books are therefore in the actual order in which he left them. In view however of any difficulties of search likely to arise from such arrangement, alphabetical lists both of the titles of the works and of the names of the authors have been added as a supplement to the Catalogue.

The classification is as follows:

A. Chiefly devoted to editions of the Classics and to exegetical works upon various portions of the Confucian Canon, but containing also the writings of Taoist philosophers, various Buddhist sûtras etc. etc. [175 works in 478 vols.]

B. Under the heads of History, Biography, and Statutes, this section contains (B 734) a complete and uniform edition of the Twenty-two Dynastic Histories of China in 227 large volumes, the splendid encyclopædia of Ma Tuan-lin (489), with its prototype (476) and subsequent enlargements (527 and 629), the Mirror of History (961), the Statutes of the present dynasty (261), the Penal Code (134), various collections of reprints, etc. etc. [291 works in 2038 vols.]

C. The chief feature of this the Geographical section is the Imperial Geography (85) in 24 large vols. Here is also to be found (114) the oldest printed book in the University Library. [56 works in 263 vols.]

D. This section contains a few of the leading novels, some plays and essays, and a good collection of anthologies, including three volumes (146—148) of specimens from the writings of the poetesses of the present dynasty. [85 works in 312 vols.]

E. Besides a beautiful and valuable edition of the Imperial Dictionary of K'ang Hsi (225), this section comprises many works of especial value to the general student, such as the great literary Concordance (265), the descriptive Catalogue of the Imperial Library (143), and several important encyclopædias. [110 works in 481 vols.]

F, X, and Y. Among the "Miscellaneous" books in these sections may be mentioned a rare collection of pamphlets (F 35) issued by the T'ai-p'ings during their great rebellion, and the first 12 volumes of a military encyclopædia (F 124) published in 1599. [47 works in 405 vols.]

Z. This section contains various translations of religious and scientific works; among them a facsimile copy of the New Testament in Chinese (40) as presented to the Empress-Dowager of China on her 60th birthday by the missionary body, and a copy of Euclid (41) partly translated by Matteo Ricci in 1607 and finished by A. Wylie in 1857. [32 works in 41 vols.]

G. This section is for students of the Manchu and Mongol languages, and contains in addition to translations of the Chinese Classics several useful handbooks for beginners. [87 works in 286 vols.]

Total: 883 works in 4304 volumes.

The cost of printing the catalogue has been defrayed out of a fund subscribed by some of Sir Thomas Wade's friends.

HERBERT A. GILES.
